Dear Mr Eckersley,

Re: Google Street View WiFi Collection

I write to update my letter of 18th June 2012.

Google has recently confirmed that it still has in its possession a small portion of payload data collected by our Street View vehicles in the UK. Google apologizes for this error.

In recent months, Google has been reviewing its handling of Street View disks and undertaking a comprehensive manual review of our Street View disk inventory. That review involves the physical inspection and re-scanning of thousands of disks. In conducting that review, we have determined that we continue to have payload data from the UK and other countries. We are in the process of notifying the relevant authorities in those countries.

Google would now like to delete the remaining UK data, but would like your instructions on how to proceed. We are prepared to arrange for you to review this data, or to destroy it. Google remains committed to working with the ICO on this matter.

Respectfully yours,

Peter Fleischer
